The Murrow Boys: Pioneers on the Front Lines of Broadcast ...

The Murrow Boys were a hotshot cadre of plucky young globetrotting CBS radio news correspondents created and supervised by the mesmeric Bogart like newsman, Edward R. Murrow; who as cohorts smoked, drank, bluffed, blustered and whored their way across the battlefield theatres of World War II.

The Murrow Boys: Pioneers on the Front Lines of Broadcast ...

The "Murrow Boys" were a group of radio correspondents active before, and for a while after, World War II who were considered protégés of the great CBS journalist and smoker, Edward R. Murrow.

Murrow Boys

They formed the "Murrow Isn't God Club," which soon disbanded after Murrow asked if he could join. Murrow recruited several promising journalists in the mold of the original Boys, some of whom became close enough to Murrow that they are seen as a second generation. They include: David Schoenbrun, who covered France.

The Murrow Boys: Pioneers on the Front Lines of Broadcast Journalism. By Stanley Cloud and Lynne Olson. This is an excellent book on many levels. The husband and wife team of Cloud (former Washington bureau chief for Time) and Olson (former Moscow correspondent for Associated Press) pierce the smog of time to recall The Murrow Boys.

The Murrow Boys: Pioneers on the Front Lines of Broadcast ...

The Murrow boys and, of course, Ed Murrow himself, were one of a kind and Lynne Olson's narrative of them and the times was very fascinating and readable, especially for those who like that subject matter. Current day television news will never have the flavor and courage to report what the Murrow Boys did. How sad.
